Years 1794 and 1795 One of our' fellowtravelers, M. De Guignes, a Frenchman, who accompanied the embassy in quality of Interpreter, noted down his observations also, with the intention of publishing them; but his project, which may even serve to {hew the conformity of our remarks, was of no use to me, since neither I nor any other person attached to the embassy, had any knowledge of his work. My Journal, on the contrary, was copied for the Ambassa'dor, and lay open to the inspection of all the other Dutchmen who performed the journey. Forgotten Books

* The book provides a glimpse of the visual history of India at the beginning of the industrial travel era, a hundred years back* Explore the geographic diversity of 130+ cities through 550 picture postcards of pre-Partition India* The book contains a detailed catalogue of the printers, photographers and publishers of the first picture postcards of IndiaWith the dawn of the twentieth century, at the height of the British Empire, came significant changes in the landscape of India - formation of new capital cities in the plains and summer retreats in the hills, evolution of towns or nagores and pores, growth of cantonment towns with their military and civil lines, development of ports or pattanams and creation of cultural, educational and trading centers, all increasingly well connected by an extensive rail, road and later on, air network. The 550 postcards featured in this book visually document this growth, while also capturing evidence of earlier times in India's fascinating polytemporal towns. The postcards are divided across six chapters representing six regions within India and Pakistan, as they were a hundred years ago. Through these picture postcards and the supporting text, the readers can vividly imagine what it would have been like to travel by road or rail across India during the period 1896-1947. An attractive and nostalgic record of the topography of the time, these picture postcards are an untapped resource for those interested in the evolution of cities, town planning, architecture, ethnography, sociology or, simply, travel. Notes, Memoranda and Letters Exchanged and Agreements Signed
